Coffee at sundown? Kenya sits next to coffee's birthplace, Ethiopia, but it took a thousand years for coffee to make it across the border. While French missionaries first brought Bourbon to Kenya in 1893, it was under British colonial rule that coffee cultivation spread in the 1900s. Today, many people would list Kenyan coffee among the five best in the world. With its rich body, intense acidity, and delightful aroma, it should be no wonder.

The word "curry", however, was invented by the British when India was under colonial rule. Like many things, curry's journey to various regions across the world can be traced back to colonialism where it was used as a flavour disguise for old meat and vegetables.

Masala Chai $26

Myer's Dark Rum, Campari Infusion, Yuzu Juice, Chai Tea, Cardamom Bitters

Homage to the Indian tea beverage. The origins of masala chai date back thousands of years to where an ancient king who presided over what is now India, used to sip a brewed concoction of spices to remain alert through long court sessions. There are also records of the beverage being used as a remedy for mild ailments and served as a welcome drink to guests. The drink was caffeine-free and it was only in 1835 that the British introduced black tea leaves to the invention.

One of the oldest recreational drugs. China was once a great market for Opium, a highly addictive narcotic. Approximately 27% of the country's male population is hooked on Opium, and it was crucial to the country's trade in centuries past. So crucial was it that it led to two opium wars waged against China - first by Britain, and subsequently by Britain and France.

桃花香 Táo Huā Xiāng $26
